"Is it possible that this recession has a silver lining? Absolutely! What is it? Reassessing and improving your relationship with your money has never been easier because so many people adversely impacted by the economic downturn have never been so motivated to improve their financial standing.

While money decisions have always had consequences, this recession captured everybody's attention. Many lost a home to escalating mortgage rates, became unemployed or are now in their twilight years without a retirement plan. These sobering realities have families proactively communicating about money.

Cooperative economic practices such as family budgeting and planning all aspects of a sound financial future should be being discussed at kitchen tables from San Francisco to Boston. But, all too often, the conversation never begins. Mind Over Money Matters will successfully facilitate this all-important communication process." ~Excerpt from my book "Mind Over Money Matters: It's Your Money So Take It Personally"™.

Money matters - for every generation in your family. I hope this book will help your household learn how to better control personal money rather than it controlling you.

Here's to your health and wealth.
